

The University of Cincinnati, College of Nursing uses Multiple Mini Interviews \(MMI\) – a research-based interviewing process that identifies non-cognitive indicators linked to specific desired attribute as part of our admission process for the BSN program. Through these brief interviews attributes often seen in great students, great nurses, great leaders and great employees can be identified. This process is also being used in our Nurse Anesthesia Program, a highly competitive Doctorate of Nursing Practice program, as well as in several medical schools throughout the country, including the UC Medical School.
